Liverpool, L10 1LD

New Hall in Fazakerley was opened in 1890 to house children from the West Derby Workhouse. The idea was first conceived in 1888 as a philanthropic project that today still remains an important part of Liverpool's social history.

The campus layout and philosophy is based upon the Swiss/German model of self sufficient housing as opposed to the more commonly found 19th century English institutional model. In recent years the buildings have become vacant and fallen into disrepair.

Next Big Thing's proposals seek to breathe new life into these buildings by introducing a mix of commercial and residential uses. The site will include residential apartments and houses, serviced and non-serviced office, a range of residential care properties, commercial spaces and a children's nursery.
